Spanish Court Sets Condition On Extraditing Ex-C.I.A. Agent

MADRID, Sept. 24 (AP) — A Spanish court agreed today to extradite a former Central Intelligence Agency agent convicted in New York of illegal arms dealing on the condition that he be given a new trial in the United States.

The former agent, George Gregory Korkola, 42 years old, was convicted last year with another former C.I.A. agent, Frank E. Terpil, in State Supreme Court in Manhattan. He was sentenced in absentia to up to 53 years in prison.

The Spanish National Court said the United States must certify by Nov. 24 that Mr. Korkola would be given a new trial. If such assurances are not received by then, the court said, Mr. Korkola will be set free and the extradition request denied.

CORRECTION

Because of an editing error, an article Saturday incorrectly identified George Gregory Korkola, who is being extradited from Spain on charges relating to illegal arms dealing. The article should have identified Frank E. Terpil, not Mr. Korkola, as a former Central Intelligence Agency agent.
